The Cohens Suffocated Just Before Reaching the Windows.

Other Panic-Stricken Tenants Res cued by Brave Men.

The big double tenement at 137 Orchard street was the scene of a terrifying fire early this morning. Three persons, comprising one family, were suffocated in their rooms, and two more were injured in making their escape.

The tenants were panic-stricken, and it is remarkable that more lives were the firemen after the fire was out. They were prostrated by the smoke, in trying to reach the fire-escapes.

The building is a five-story "double decker," with four families on a floor.

The two stores on the ground floor were occupied by T. Joseph, butcher, and H. Danman, barber.

The second story was occupied in the front by Mrs. Jacobs, a widow, her three daughters, and two boarders; and Edmund Trauner, his wife and two children. In the rear lived Moses Amenatein, his wife and five children, and R. Goldstein, wife and four children, and two boarders.

Edmund Trace defended for the children, atein, his wife and five children, R. Goldstein, wife and four children, and two boarders.

WHERE THE FIRE STARTED. WHERE THE FIRE STARTED.

The fire started in the stairs leading from the fourth to the fifth floors, and many of the tenants do not hesitate to assert that the fire was of incendiary origin. They say that there was a plain smell of kerosene in the building.

Policeman Dooley was standing at the corner of Ludlow and Rivington streets at 4 o'clock this morning, when he heard screams and cries of fire, which brought him around to Orchard street. He was joined by Policeman Slattery.

The two rushed into the tenement, which was filled with smoke. Sparks were failing in showers into the lower hall. Dooley ran to send out the later.

The fire-escapes were crowded with the frantic tenants, many of whom wanted to jump. Policeman Slattery had a hard time to prevent them.

clothes, and many of the children were asked.

The iron ladders connecting the fire-escapes at each story were covered with a thin coating of ice, which made descent extremely perlious.

The fire had spread very rapidly on the three upper floors, and was burning from the windows, and enveloped the people huddled together on the balconies.

Christopher Michael, of 344 East One Hundred and Eighteenth street, is the owner. The loss on the building and to the tenants is about $2,500.

Joseph Diamond, a brother to Mrs. Sophia Cohen, was in the habit of sleeping there occasionally.

Some of the tenants declared that he was not there last night, while Mrs. Trauner, who lives on the second floor, was positive she saw him going through the hall soon after the outbreak.

Diamond could not be found during the fire.

When the firemen came, ladders were run up, and the panic-stricken tenants were assisted down by the police and firemen.

Mrs. Hoelder, a widow, sixty-four years old, who lived with her daughter on the top story, had come down as far as the first-story fire-escape. There she and her daughter became exhausted. He said that Charles i. Feltman, son of the proprietor, was belaind the bar.

Langan objected to receiving a silver hair dollar in chaige because, he said, it was bad. He then alleged that Feltman came from behind the bar and knocked nim down.

Feltman called for assistance, and George Meyer hit Langan, according to his story, over the head and face with a seltzer-water bottle, and James Thorne, the barkeeper, kicked him in the body and lace when he was down on the barroom floor.

They then tried to put him out, he said, and finally succeeded in doing so. During the fracas a revolver was discharged.

Young Feltman is about twenty-four years old. He is the cashier of the Tivoli. To an "Evening Werld" reporter he told this story:

"The first time I ever saw Langan was last Monday night. He was up in the hail. He bought drinks and gave the waiter $5 in payment.
